COMMUTE Journal 4: harvesting results

In the fourth Journal of the COMMUTE project, UIA Expert Vanessa Holve presents the developments of the project between November 2019 and the end of March 2020. COMMUTE is now in the second half of its lifetime, with all actions being actively implemented and some already evaluated. The project has matured and sometimes slightly changed directions, though always remaining true to its main goal of improving air quality and life quality of its citizens, by testing an innovative governance system between the public and private sector.

The objective of the first period was to define the overall management structure and monitoring framework. Following the implementation phase, COMMUTE is now harvesting results from most of its actions. From finalization and evaluation, communication and replication, COMMUTE still has a lot to tell us until its closure.
